On November 2, 1944, during a German attack, Sergeant Valentine Zimniewicz and a fellow soldier laid wire from the American command post to the forward observation post and relayed messages to bring artillery fire on defensive zones and German mortars. Remaining at their posts all through the night, Sergeant Zimniewicz and 20 Infantrymen realized by morning that they were surrounded by German forces. To avoid capture, Sergeant Zimniewicz instructed his comrades to head for the rear lines and covered their withdrawal with weapon fire, enabling them to reach a friendly unit. After his ammunition was expended, Sergeant Zimniewicz withdrew and proceeded to the rear and informed the battalion command post of the situation, permitting reinforcement of the endangered units resulting in repelling the German counterattack. The gallantry displayed by Sergeant Valentine Zimniewicz while engaged with enemy forces earned him the Silver Star
